Rabbi Levin, the Chief Rabbi of Moscow, recites a prayer of thanksgiving during his 75th birthday celebrations in the Central Synagogue last week.

ONLY 2 RABBIS ADMITTED

Moscow

Rabbi Yehuda Leib Levin, the Chief Rabbi of Moscow, celebrated his 75th birthday at a special service in Moscow's Central Synagogue last week, but only two of the nine foreign rabbis he had invited were present. Among those who did not receive visas in time to attend were the Israeli Sephardi Chief Rabbi, Itzhak Nissim, and the British Chief Rabbi, Dr. I. Jakobovits.

The two foreign rabbis who joined the 2,000 Moscow Jews in the synagogue were Rabbi Arthur Schneier, of New York's Park East Synagogue, who presented Rabbi Levin with a silver kiddush cup from the Rabbinical Council of America and a curtain for the Ark from his synagogue and himself, and Rabbi David Hollander, of the Mount Eden Jewish Centre in the Bronx.

OFFICIAL FROM MOSCOW

AID AIR PIRATES

For the first time Moscow admitted its support of the international air traffic piracy last week when Pravda, the leading daily of the USSR Community Party, declared the Zurich attack terrorists "as patriots who are determined to establish their legitimate rights to return home." Israel, Pravda said has no right to take action against Arab countries or governments who tolerate or encourage such activities.

Also, in a broadcast in Arabic, Moscow radio stated: "The Soviet people regard the members of the Arab resistance movement with true sympathy and offer the just Arab cause all forms of support."

Thus the Soviet Union officially acknowledged it is supplying arms and giving support not only to the recognized Arab governments but to the terrorists as well.

However this Russian admission did not help much in gaining Chinese support. In fact, the Deputy Foreign Minister of Peoples' China, Chi Peng Fei, declared Monday night in Peking that the Soviet Government is involved in a "colusion" to force the Arab countries to capitulate to Israel. It also accused the Soviet Union of making an effort to seize complete control of the Middle East in partnership with the United States.

Diplomats stationed in China noted that the Chinese Deputy Foreign Minister, while including Soviet satellites in his attack, excluded Roumania which entertains the best relations with Israel.

While China may be engaged now in a new movement to fight Soviet influence in the Middle East, observers say, it is not impossible that it would take a less lenient attitude toward Israel than Moscow which is now encouraging Nasser and Syria to reject peace with Israel.

In another area of Middle East politics, the "suicide" of Syria's chief of police, Abdel Karim Jundi, following a new coup together with the most recent Iraqi hangings, some of them secret, have convinced some Western circles that most Arab regimes are absolutely unreliable in their undertakings. Israel certainly will not accept any peace diktat.

A new development reported from Washington following the return of Nixon and his party from Europe is the suggestion by Henry Kissinger, the U.S. President's chief adviser, that negotiations should include the El Fatah because engagements on the part of the official governments may be worthless. This position, if accepted, may drag out the negotiations in the Middle East for years.

In Montreal the National Public Relations Committee of the Federated Zionist Organization, Canadian Jewish Congress and B'nai B'rith this week again warned against new hangings of political opponents including Jews in Iraq.

Abba Eban, Foreign Minister of Israel, this week told the Canadian Jewish News correspondent in Jerusalem that Nasser's interview with the New York Times in which he predicted a fourth round confirms Israel's views that the Egyptian dictator is not a free agent and is committed to promote the Soviet policy of sabotaging peace in the Middle East.

TERROR IN CANADA: HOW TO PREVENT IT

Quebec's Premier Jean-Jacques Bertrand profoundly impressed a Union Nationale rally last Sunday when he eloquently denounced the first symptoms of terror in his province with a deep sense of reverence for the North American tradition of "ballot instead of bullet." He stressed the blessings of democracy we all enjoy: the right to dissent, the right to elect our leaders and the freedom of religion.

This, I am sure, will remain part of North America's inhabitants no matter what our enemies may have in store for us. Canadians and Americans of all races are united despite the lunatic fringe cropping up in different areas and within certain communities in defense and in love for their cherished liberty.

Liberty is not given but taken—yet it also can be taken away if not properly understood and defended with passion and complete dedication. As Matteoti, Mussolini's martyred opponent, said when it was too late: freedom is like the air one breathes; only an asthmatic can feel its lack.

Here in Canada we are witness recently to the beginnings of a dangerous terrorist movement obviously fed from abroad, especially in Quebec.

Even in Toronto, as reported in The Canadian Jewish News last week, we in this newspaper have received threats in the mail which we take seriously and which we have turned over to our attorney for discussion with the RCMP.

I believe the documents handed over to the authorities hold a clue to the perpetrators of these obnoxious acts. They should be nipped in the bud—and they can be if the authorities pay it the proper attention.

As one great Frenchman said, "An error can be graver than a crime." It would be a serious error on the part of those in charge of our security not to pursue the clear road to catch up with these half-insane men and women engaged in this kind of "politics".

There definitely is an underground in Canada feeding the ego of such lunatics. At this moment they may be less dangerous in Toronto than in Quebec. But in such a situation one easily can see the beginning of turmoil though not its end.

We are living in a society where many associate freedom of speech and the right to protest with the license by a minority to terrorize the rule by majority. If such terror is accepted, this spells the end of society, of law and order. In a democracy it is the privilege of the citizen to disagree with certain laws, to dislike certain rulings, to fight them in legislatures and in courts; but one cannot take the law into his own hands.

There was a time when some anti-Fascist circles in Toronto, aroused by provocations on the part of neo-Fascist rabblerousers, were ready to take the law into their own hands. At that time I spoke up against such tactics which we in a democracy cannot condone.

The same applies to the law enforcing agencies. If citizens are harassed continuously by threats of an obviously organized group, it is their duty to protect the individuals not only in the interest of those under attack but in order to prevent a deterioration of the situation leading to chaos and anarchy.

Israel Government crisis - the beginning or end?

GOLDA MEIR AT THE HELM

Jerusalem (CJN).-If and when Golda Meir, former Foreign Minister, will be entrusted on Monday, March 10th, with the formation of a new cabinet, the crisis in Israeli politics will be over officially till the November elections.

It seems that up to the last minute Mrs. Meir may hesitate in accepting this assignment because of her ill health. In that event, Pinchas Sapir may be called to form the government.

However it is almost certain that Mrs. Meir will become the next Prime Minister of Israel when Yigal Allon steps down as Acting Premier coming Monday. Yet the new Prime Minister may face an internal crisis within the Israeli Labor Party.

Moshe Dayan, the most popular contender for the Prime Minister's office, is reported to be negotiating with Menachem Begin, leader of Herut, to form a new anti-Mapai election alignment. Mr. Begin reportedly assured Mr. Dayan he would become Number Two, second to the General, on such a list to the next Knesset elections. Mr. Dayan voted against the appointed of Mrs. Meir as caretaker Prime Minister.

The Central Committee of the Israeli Labor Party, meeting Sunday night, will vote on the succession to the Prime Minister. Mrs. Meir is determined to keep the present coalition intact and Dayan will not leave the Government before new elections.

MARTIN TOLD ISRAEL STAND

OTTAWA (CJH).-His Excellency Ephraim Evron, Israel's new Ambassador to Canada, is taking up his new post this week, the CJN learned, replacing the one vacant since the death of the late Arieh Eshel.

Mr. Avron formerly held diplomatic posts in Sweden, Switzerland and Washington.

Reports from Jerusalem indicate that the Hon. Paul Martin, former Foreign Minister of Canada who together with Philip Givens, M.P., represented the Canadian Government at the Eshkol funeral last Thursday, was briefed by the Jerusalem authorities on the Middle East situation.

Mr. Martin, now Speaker of the Senate, expressed his interest in many facets of possible diplomatic activities on behalf of peace in the Middle East.

IRAQ REFUSES TO LET THEM GO

by the CJN diplomatic editor

United Nations, New York, N.Y.- The decision by the Canadian Government and the Government of The Netherlands to admit Jews from Iraq if permitted to emigrate has caused embarrassment at the Secretariat of the Organization of the United Nations. Despite the fact that the hostages kept by the regimes of Baghdad, Damascus and Cairo now would find a haven in Europe and North America, there is little hope here that they would be allowed to leave their respective countries.

Here at East River there are two theories for the explanation of the fact that practically none can leave Iraq, Egypt or Syria:

- The extremist Arab governments are determined to keep these Jews as hostages.
- The Secretary-General of the United Nations, U Thant, really has done very little to pressure these governments for the release of the Jewish hostages.
- It is stated here that the Secretary-General could help if he would engage the services of powers friendly with any or all Arab governments.
- Meanwhile diplomats here discount the recent events in the Middle East as being on the verge of war.
- Israel, experts predict, will continue limited retaliation as it is determined not to become involved in a full pledged war. It will continue to defend itself and to exterminate all centers of terrorism no matter what occurs.

BONN VICE PRESIDENT IS A PRACTISING JEW

London (JCNS) - West Germany's acting Federal President, Dr. Herbert Weichmann, is a practising Jew who on every possible occasion proclaims his origins and the fact that members of his family have perished at the hands of the Nazis. After visiting London about 18 months ago he became a member of the board of the Wiener Library, which has the best collection in the world of material dealing with Nazi Germany and every other manifestation of intolerance and persecution.

Dr. Weichmann, a tall, handsome man who last week celebrated his 73rd birthday, had lunch with Mr. Harold Wilson when the Prime Minister visited Bonn last week.

The first Jew since Walter Rathenau, murdered in the 1920s, to reach such a high position in Germany, Dr. Weichmann is acutely aware of the tragedy that befell German Jewry.

His own mother, sister and a brother-in-law were killed by the Nazis.

His rise to prominence in German life has been dramatic. The son of a doctor in the lower Silesian town of Liegnitz - now part of Poland - he became a high official during the Weimar Republic and a High Court Judge. When Hitler came to power, Dr. Weichmann left for France, then for Spain and eventually managed to enter the United States where he became a university lecturer.

At the invitation of the Mayor of Hamburg, Max Brauer, he joined the city's Social Democratic administration and, after holding top posts, was himself elected Chief Burgomaster. This was followed by his election as president of the Federal Council (Bundesrat) the upper house of the West German Parliament.

Dr. Eva Reichmann, former research director of the Wiener Library, told us that Dr. Weichmann attends synagogue services and emphasises his Jewishness at every possible opportunity.

The lighter side of Israel

BATTLE OF WIGS IN FULL SWING

Tel Aviv - The new Sephardi chief rabbi of Tel Aviv, Ovadia Josef, is fifty years old, one of the most distinguished Talmudic experts in Israel. At the age of five he came to Palestine and studied at the Bnai Zion Zalmud Torah in the Bucharian Quarter of Jerusalem and later in the Porat Josef Yeshiva in the Old City. At twenty he already was a rabbi; four years later he became a member of the Chief Sephardi Rabbinate in Jerusalem.

In 1947 Rabbi Ovadia went to Cairo. He was invited there to supervise the religious life of Egyptian Jewry together with Chief Rabbi Nahum Effendi.

After the War of Independence, he returned to Israel where he settled in Petah Tikva. Later he was appointed a member of the Great Rabbinical Court in Jerusalem.

A few months ago the Rabbi was elected Chief Sephardi Rabbi of Tel Aviv, successor to the late Rabbi Toledano. He wrote many religious books the most famous of which is, Yabia Omer. He received many prizes for his works.

* * * *

Recently Rabbi Ovadia assumed his new office in Tel Aviv without waiting for the official coronation ceremony.

The Israeli press reported that the new Sephardi Chief Rabbi had declared that if a religious woman wears a wig, her husband could divorce her.

The pious women rebelled and declared they would not put up with such a decision.

Chief Rabbi Ovadia also announced that religious women may not enter a synagogue or appear in public wearing a wig since this was against the custom of Jewish daughters and against modesty. He appealed to the religious newspapers to refrain from publishing any advertisements regarding wigs. Whereas the religious women were averse to this appeal, nonreligious circles noted it with satisfaction; it was the best propaganda against religion, they contended.

Rabbi Ovadia later denied he ever had prohibited religious women from wearing wigs and that this custom was ground for divorce. He admitted, though, that upon the demand of Israel's Sephardi community he had written a booklet and devoted one of the chapters to the matter of wigs since Sephardi women had given up head coverings and had begun to wear modern wigs. This caused a storm of anger among the Sephardi Jews.

Rabbi Ovadia defended himself by stating that men took this as cause for divorce. "I quoted Rabbi Kluger from Galicia who lived one hundred years ago and had prohibited the wearing of wigs."

Haaretz, Israel's daily, took a referendum among religious women concerning the wearing of wigs. The majority voiced their opinion against the demand of Rabbi Ovadia. Only the wife of the Chief Rabbi of Tel Aviv, Zipia Goren, accepted the stand of the Sephardi Chief Rabbi.

However the matter was not closed. The management of the school of wigmaking in Kfar Habad (the religious village supported by the Lubavitcher Rebbe of New York) disagreed with Ovadia's opinion.

The director of the school, Rabbi Shmuel Hefer, maintains that in the Shulchan Aruch (Code of Laws) there is no prohibition of wearing wigs. There are some opinions about it but not everyone can issue a ruling in this delicate matter, Rabbi Hefer says; hundreds of daughters have found work in this religious school where wigmaking is taught. The Lubavitcher Rebbe supports the school and Rabbi Hefer desired all Jewish daughters to wear wigs.

CALLS FOR RELENTLESS FIGHT AGAINST NPD

Duesseldorf (JCNS) - Adolf von Thadden told some 700 delegates to the congress of his extreme Right-wing National Democratic Party at Schwabach, near Nuremberg, on Saturday, that he was confident the party would obtain between 8 and 12 per cent of the poll in the autum Bonn parliamentary election. (This would give it up to 60 seats). About $3 million was available for election expenses.

Barbed wire fences were placed round the congress building, which was heavily protected by several hundred policemen besides 500 N.D.P. guards.

At Karlsruhe, Herr Werner Nachmann, the chairman of the board of the Central Council of Jews in Germany, said that the leaders of the West German democratic parties had minimized the importance of the N.D.P. for too long and he called for a "relentless fight" against this party.

Herr Ernst Benda, the Bonn Minister of the Interior, said on Sunday that the material compiled by his Ministry about N.D.P. activities justified an application to the Constitutional Court by the Government to outlaw the party. The memorandum had been submitted to the Cabinet, but he could not predict its decision.

At Bayreith, Herr Helmut Schmidt, the chairman of the Social Democratic Party in the Bonn Parliament, told a rally of 4,000 socialists and trade unionists last Friday that the N.D.P. was a latent threat to democracy.

First Jewish wedding since 1453

Palma Majorca (JCNS) - Majorca's first Jewish marriage since 1435 took place here last week, when Miss Marlyin Kesselman was married to Mr. Arnold Rosen at the first Jewish religious ceremony to be sanctioned by the Civil Governor of the Balearic Islands since the fifteenth century.

The bride's father, Mr. Alec Kesselman, is the kashrut supervisor at Spain's only kosher hotel, the Hotel del Mar, in Palma. The groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. Rosenberg, live in Golders Green, London.

Rabbi Salomon Ben-Sabbat, of Barcelona, conducted the wedding ceremony, assisted by Rabbi Isaac Chait, of Sheffield, who was staying at the hotel.

There are no chupa on the island, so the hotel management had one specially made for the occasion. It is being kept for presentation to any future Jewish community that may be formed in Majorca.

Slovakia pledges freedom

Prague (JCNS) - Any anti-semitic tendencies which may appear in Slovakia will be firmly suppressed, and the Slovak Government will do its utmost to secure the civil liberties guaranteed by law to all citizens.

This pledge was given by the Slovak Minister of Culture, Mr. Miroslaw Valek, at a meeting with Rabbi Isidor Katz and Dr. Benjamin Eichler, the chairman of the Central Union of Slovak Jewish Communities.

Denmark's contribution to world cheer!

Cherry Heering first made in Copenhagen in 1818, is still being made in exactly the same way, in exactly the same place by the Heering family.

Cherry Heering is made from plump black Danish cherries. Its rich, dark cerise bouquet and flavor make it unique.

Cherry Heering is a liqueur whose cheerful cherry flavor ends a meal on just the right note. On ice or in tall drinks it is delectable. Poured over ice cream it makes a sensational dessert.

Cherry Heering is a Danish delight as popular as Danish pastry, as elegant as Danish furniture. Cherry Heering is Denmark's contribution to world friendship and international cheerfulness.

ASSOCIATED GRADUATION ON MONDAY

One hundred and thirty students will receive diplomas at the combined Graduation Exercises of Toronto's Community Hebrew Academy and the Junior Day High School of Associated. The ceremonies will take place on Monday, March 10th at 7:30 p.m. in the Auditorium of Associated, at Bathurst and Neptune.

Of the total number graduating, 19 are graduates of Grade 13 of the Academy, all of them currently enrolled in one of the two Toronto universities. A number of them are also continuing their Jewish education at the Toronto Midrasha L'Morim or in private study. Twenty-one students of the Academy will receive Grade 12 Certificates.

Ninety students, graduates of the Associated Junior High, will also participate. The majority of these are now continuing in Grade Ten of the Academy. The Community Hebrew Academy (Senior Day High School) is sponsored by the United Jewish Welfare Fund of Toronto.

Presiding over the Graduation Exercises will be Mr. Harold L. Dessen, C.A., Chairman, Board of Education of Associated, and Mr. Samuel J. Sable, President of the Community Hebrew Academy.

Greetings will be extended by Mr. Joseph Levine, President of the Associated; and Mr. Stephen E. Berger, Chairman, Toronto Board of Jewish Education, who will greet on behalf of the Board, and of the United Jewish Welfare Fund.

Also participating will be Mr. J.B. Goldhar, Chairman, Scholarships and Awards; Mr. J. Cohen, Chairman, Athletic Committee; Mr. Wilfred Gordon, Q.C., Immediate Past President of both Associated and of the Community Hebrew Academy.

Valedictorians will be Lana Kideckel for the Junior High and David Frankel for the Academy.

Musical selections will be rendered by Barbara Gryfe, Zvi Kamen, Samuel Konigsberg and the pupils of Grade 9.

Principals of the Junior High and the Academy are: Mr. Jacob Burke, M.A., Head of the Hebrew Department, and Dr. Solomon Burack, Head of the General Studies Department.

ASK THE RABBI
a JCNS featurette

Q. Would you say Purim is a religious festival? If it is, why the jollification in synagogue?

A. Purim denotes not alone the deliverance of the Jews from Haman's plot to destroy them but also the constant miracle of Jewish survival. To rejoice at this and to give thanks to God for it is surely "religious." Unless religion is always to be identified with solemnity, it is hard to see why it should be incompatible with jollification. One of the reasons for Jewish survival has been the Jew's capacity to laugh, not least at himself. Some modern thinkers have seen in the lighthearted Purim approach to the Jewish faith a means of finding, at least once a year, a measure of psychological relief from what otherwise might tend to become an oppressive burden.

* * * *

Q. I am told that God's name is not mentioned in the megila which we read on Purim, and that there is no suggestion that the Jewish people's deliverance from Haman was the work of God. How then did the book find its way into the Canon?

A. It is true that the megila is the only book in the Bible in which there is no reference to God. The Talmud (Megila 7a) records that as late as the second century C.E. it was still debated whether the book of Esther was written under the inspiration of the holy spirit, but eventually the book was admitted into the Canon. It has been noted that there are references to fasting in the megila (Chapters 4, vv. 3 and 16; 9, 31) and this only seems to have significance in a religious context. Ibn Ezra, in the introduction to his Commentary to Esther, discusses the absence of God's name from the book. He rejects the view that the words "another place" (Esther 4, 14) refer to God since the word makom ("place") as a name for God is Rabbinic and, in any event, how can Mordechai refer to God as "another God"? Ibn Ezra advances the well-known suggestion that since the book was to be included in the annals of the Persian kings the name of God was intentionally omitted in order to prevent its being replaced by the name of a pagan deity.

A careful reading of the megila would seem, in fact, to show that the divine name was consciously avoided. The late Professor A. Marmorstein (of Jews' College) made the interesting conjecture that the book was compiled during the Greek period and was influenced by the Greek idea that it was positively blasphemous to give God a name. Other Jewish teachers see the megila as teaching the lesson that God is not only at work in the obvious miracle but is in control of His world at all times, behind the scenes, as it were, as in the story of the megila. Hence God is not mentioned directly, but His power is to be discerned in all things by men and women of faith. The suggestion has also been made that the divine name was omitted because the megila is read on Purim when a degree of levity prevails and His name might be taken lightly. But this is far-fetched. The Midrash homiletically reads every reference to ha-melech ("the king") in the megila as refering to the King of the universe. This is why in some megilot each column begins with this word (the hamelech megila).

The Schoolteacher from Milwaukee

GOLDA MEIR

First, let it be clear: in Israel there cannot be a serious crisis of the regime no matter who is elected or appointed to run the country. It is not Syria where a ruler is liquidated a few days after an Israeli expedition of retaliation—as the one of last week—during which 150 El Fatah gangsters perished (according to the New York Times).

Israel is a democracy with a government elected by the people for the people. A prime minister of Israel may not be able to smile with the sweetness of licorice as does Nasser, or threaten a foreign government because it does not pay enough for certain concessions. But in the face of foreign intervention and external pressure, there are no political feuds.

Certainly, like any free country Israel has political parties, perhaps too many. As in a democratic country, the ruling body of the Israel Labor Party, which now commands a slight majority in the Knesset, the party machine determines who is most qualified at a given moment to head the council of ministers.

We know that Moshe Dayan is the most popular Israeli of our time. Should he be prime minister? If so, we shall have to wait till the November elections when the people decide whom they want at head of the government.

Meanwhile the Israel Labor Party appointed a former American schoolteacher from Milwaukee, a woman of seventy, ripe in age and government experience, to lead the country as Prime Minister of the caretaker government.

In a sense, Golda Meir as Prime Minister of Israel is spiritually Eshkol's successor. She does not belong to the doves despite some opinions to the contrary; but she heads the party machine and probably will be especially active in leading her party to the forthcoming elections.

Golda Meir is a woman of valor, to paraphrase a biblical term. Her ascendance to the highest position of power in the country again demonstrates how democratic a country Israel is. A woman as Prime Minister of Israel shows that any career is open to the female, even if she was raised in the United States and still may be speaking Hebrew with an American accent. Perhaps this fact will inspire some North American youngsters to go to Israel, a country without discrimination par excellence.

Will the appointment of Golda Meir spell the finis to the struggle for succession following the demise of Levi Eshkol? Probably not. It seems that only a majority of the Labor Party in the coalition voted for her. Herut, the National Religious Party and the General Zionists would prefer a less dedicated party horse of the Labor Movement at the helm. They have every right to agitate within the democratic process for her replacement. But whatever happens will occur in the tradition of liberal democracy.

The people of Israel are united behind its government and are aware of the danger of too much politicking at this time.

No one doubts the capability of Golda Meir nor should anyone have any misgivings about her great talents as statesman and leader.

We in the Diaspora definitely must refrain from any involvement in the future election campaign of Israel. What we should do, all we must do, all we can do is strengthen with all our might Israel's struggle for survival and development as a nation among nations.

To Golda Meir go all our best wishes in this hour of trial for she now is the standard bearer of Historic Israel, its hopes and aspirations.

The Germans among us

THE GERMAN-AMERICANS
AN INFORMAL HISTORY
By Richard O'Connor
Little, Brown & Co.

In 1941 when the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor American officials were quick to remove thousands of Japanese-Americans to "internment" camps on the west coast despite the fact that not a single member of that community was ever charged with a treasonable act. Yet when the United States declared war on Nazi Germany no effort was made to segregate a group which had actively campaigned against America's entry into the conflict - the German-Americans. Richard O'Connor tells us why in his expertly written account of the German element in American society. "The United States Census . . . indicates that - there were simply too many of them." As early as 1910 over eight million Americans could trace their ancestry back to the Vaterland. The government could hardly have considered interning so vast a number.

The great German population did not spring up overnight. It began in the earliest days of the American republic. During the eighteenth century thousands of Germans emigrated to the new world in search of opportunity, adventure and in many cases a respite from harsh economic conditions at home. Even in those days, author O'Connor observes that many of the German migrants saw in America a future Germanic state which could preserve the best Aryan ideals. Such ideological considerations, however, were not seriously received by the masses of people in pioneer America and the new order never really got a foothold on American soil.

What the American continent welcomed in the person of the German settler was the latter's industriousness, intelligence, and resourcefulness. The German-Americans were among the pioneers in the great industrial enterprises. Jacob Astor in a sense personified the American dream - a self made millionaire who made his first money on the frontier and parlayed it into fantastic profits. Carl Schurz, an idealistic social democrat, made a name for himself through his efforts to promote the cause of socialism and liberty. On his death he was eulogized by such people as ex-president Cleveland and Booker T. Washington.

In a chapter called "The Jewish Grand Dukes and Others," the author delves into an area treated in Stephen Birmingham's Our Crowd. While covering much of the same territory O'Connor has some instructive things to say about the chauvinism which German Jews displayed toward their homeland. Many proudly displayed their Iron Crosses and supported Germany during the First World War - an activity which ceased with the end of the war and the emergence of Hitler. During the First World War the German government deemed the support of the German-Jews so important that it dispatched a certain Dr. Strauss to propagandize its ex-patriates. Dr. Strauss reported back to his superiors that he had succeeded beyond his expectations.

In some ways the schizophrenic attitude displayed by German-Jews towards the fatherland was a reflection of the feelings of all German-Americans. The emergence of the Bund, a Nazi fraternal order in the late thirties showed that many of the German-Americans still felt themselves part of the German mystique. It took the ravages of the Second World War to convince them that Americanism came before teutonic myths.

CHECK-LIST:

A PICTORIAL HISTORY OF RUSSIA - Edited by John Stuart Martin. General Publishing Co.,

Many of the photographs in this sprightly volume are first rate. However, those representing some of the early stages of the revolutionary period are of rather poor quality. The accompanying text is concise and literate. No color photographs.

SINAI - By Heinz Skrobucha. Oxford University Press. 119 pp.

A handsome volume dealing with the history, archeology and religion of the mountain where Moses received the ten commandments. The orientation is Christian throughout but this does not mar the thoughtful text nor the breath taking color photographs of such sites as the monastery of St. Katharine and mount Sinai itself.

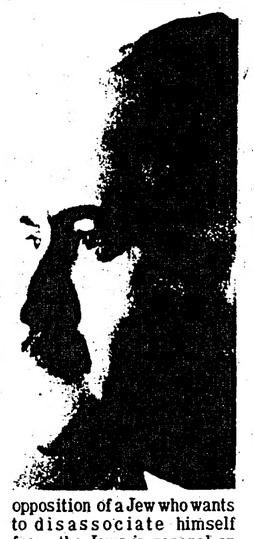
A LETTER FROM ISRAEL - By Papas. Oxford University Press.

Papas tells the story of modern Israel through a series of evocative illustrations and prose vignettes about Israelis. Don't complain about noodles in the clear soup you ordered in the Israeli restaurant, counsels Papas. The waiter will tell you to drink the soup and leave the noodles!

THE TITO OF THE MIDDLE EAST EXPLAINS

THE SOVIET ENIGMA

by Moshe Sneh, editor of Israel's Communist daily Kol Haam



I.

For almost fifty years the entire communist movement regarded national problems, including the problems of the Jewish people, according to Stalin's composition : "Marxism and the National Question" (1913) which was accepted as a kind of fixed theory that shouldn't be questioned. The examination of the assumptions and conclusions of this study only began in recent years and a number of grave doubts and objections have appeared.

Today serious Marxist thinkers challenge Stalin's definition of a nation as "a historically constituted, stable community of people, formed on the basis of a common language, territory, economic life, and psychological make-up manifested in a common culture"; Stalin also concluded that "the nation isn't merely a historical category but a historical category belonging to a certain epoch, the epoch of rising capitalism"; and these premises were responsible for Stalin's exaggeration of limiting the character of the national movement to the sphere of the struggle of the bourgeoisie for its national market to the point of declaring that "sometimes the bourgeoisie succeeds in drawing the proletariat into the national movement and then the national struggle externally assumes a 'nation-wide' character but this is so only externally".

First of all, Stalin's definition is defective in that it limits the concept 'nation' to the period of capitalism. Nations existed in pre-capitalist times although imperfectly and in lower stages of development. As for the period after capitalism - it was Stalin himself who was compelled to correct and supplement his words by creating the concept of "socialist nations".

An equally serious mistake is the identification of national movements with one class, the bourgeois, and placing the working class outside the national movements and struggles (its participation is "only externally"). This crude mistake is attributed to the influence of Rosa Luxemburg's completely false idea that is opposed to Leninism; she wrote among other things that: "A nation as a unified social-political entity doesn't exist in a class society but on the contrary there are classes with antagonistic interests and rights in every nation" (Selected Writings, volume 2, page 148). Indeed, the nation changes with the change of economic-social forms but its existence is not limited to one form; the nation is not a one-class public but a many-class, inter-class public and within it - as within the national movement - the relation of class forces changes, the class changes that leaves its stamp on the entire nation, on the entire national movement.

Likewise anti-dialectical is Stalin's doctrine that unless all four characteristics are present a certain people can not be regarded as a nation, with all the practical political conclusions that result from this ideological distinction. Yet the two largest peoples in the world, the Chinese and the Indian, do not have a common language. Aren't they to be considered nations? Reality is completely dialectical, constantly changing, and national groups speaking different languages can unite into one nation as in Switzerland, just as they can crystallize within the mixture of the nation with the aim of becoming separate nations in a territorial political framework as in Canada and Belgium.

Stalin's definition is defective because it is inflexible about what it includes and because the elements which it lacks. The Pakistani people, for example, were historically shaped as a nation in our times on the basis of a common religion, and the national movement that led to the partition of Hindustan into India and Pakistan was also a religious movement ("The Moslem League"). In general, Stalin's study has been justly criticized for underestimating the spiritual motives and elements in the formation and nature of nations.

Origin of race should also be considered as a factor that may lead to the formation of a nation as a result of oppression and discrimination on the one hand and self-awareness and the struggle for liberation on the other - for example, the case of the millions of Negroes in the U.S. who now have a tremendous national movement.

What is required, therefore, is a more dialectical definition of the nation that leaves a place for additional factors in the formation of nations and provides additional marks for the characteristics of nations but also postulates the possibility that the attributes which are missing will be added as well as the possibility that existing distinguishing marks will disappear. As an experimental suggestion we would define the nation as follows:

A nation is the historically created community of people of different classes that was formed by a number of unifying factors such as: common language, territory, economic life, culture, tradition, religion, race and the like.

The combination of a number of these factors can unite people into a nation but there isn't any necessity for all these factors to combine in order to form a nation.

II.

The reality of the Jewish people is especially dialectical, that is to say, full of contradictions and changes. To the present day the question: Who is a Jew? which is important not only theoretically but also practically has not received an agreed-upon answer. Every superficial and dogmatic definition will be inadequate. The answer of Jewish clericalism that regards the Jewish religion as the criterion doesn't take into consideration the process of secularization that the masses of Jews throughout the world have undergone and the existence of millions of Jews who don't have any religious affiliation, as well as the existence of faithful sons of the Jewish people that religion doesn't regard as Jews because their non-Jewish mothers weren't converted to Judaism. The answer of Jewish nationalism, the Zionist answer, that regards every person of Jewish origin as a member of the world-wide Jewish people and potential citizen of the State of Israel isn't valid for many Jews who are indifferent or opposed to religion, assimilationists from the national standpoint that consciously belong to other nations in spirit and deed but don't deny that they are Jews in origin (ethnogenetic) nor do they alienate themselves from their origin and disassociate themselves from the Jews.

If our thinking is anchored in reality we realize that there exists side by side Jews by religion, Jews by nationhood and Jews only by origin. That doesn't mean that it is possible to divide the Jews into three separate categories by these three criteria since there can be a combination of criteria in the case of the same individual and in as much as this classification isn't immutable but subject to constant change. Many Jews who came from religious homes have revolted against this tradition in recent generations. Although they abandoned religion they continued to be - or began to be - national conscious Jews and this phenomenon is still quite common. Many sons of orthodox religious and faithful national homes also entered the surrounding environment, took root in its culture, assimilated - and remained Jews only by origin. There is also a reverse phenomenon; due to a momentous event or traumatic experience Jews in origin who have no connection with Jewish religion or nationalism suddenly choose active national Jewish life and sometimes become faithful religious Jews. In conclusion we may say that:

The Jewish people is the historically created community of people of different classes that was formed by a number of unifying factors - ethnogenetic, religious, and national.

The historic origin, the ethno-genetic factor, is common to all Jews and this origin is connected with Eretz Israel (in other languages Palestine). About two thousand years before the birth of Christ the Hebrews, the Israelites, that is to say, the ancient Jews made their history in the region of Eretz Israel (whose boundaries changed, of course, with the time). But also after the Jews were exiled from Eretz Israel in consequence of the conquest by the Roman Empire they preserved their historic, religious and national tie to Eretz Israel in all their wanderings and changes of fate. Starting with the end of the 19th century the growth of antisemitism caused a mass emigration of Jews (primarily from Europe), and as a result of the historic tie mentioned above and the fact that the gates of other countries were locked, an increasing stream of Jewish immigrants came to Israel. The vision of the return of the Jews to Eretz Israel received international confirmation and encouragement twice: in the League of Nations' resolution after World War I (not in the intentions of the government of Great Britain but in the international resolution which, though defective in many respects, was valid in international law) concerning the establishment of a "national home" for the Jewish people in Eretz Israel, and in the resolution of the United Nations' Assembly concerning the establishment of a "Jewish state" in Eretz Israel after World War II. The return of the Jews to the territory of their historic homeland was bound up with the establishment of a diversified national economy with modern industry and cooperative agriculture, the creation of a class of workers and peasants, the rebirth of the ancient Hebrew language, the renewal of Jewish national culture, the gradual intermixture of groups of immigrants from dozens of countries and all the continents and the creation of a nation that doesn't lack any characteristic of a nation. In conclusion: the process of the national concentration and rebirth of the Jewish people is taking place in Eretz Israel.

The Jewish nation in the State of Israel came into existence - due to the special conditions of time and place - in consequence of the ingathering of Jews that came from their diasporas; the State of Israel is the realization of the historic tie that has existed for almost 4,000 years between the entire Jewish people and Eretz Israel. Thus, it is only natural that there is a tie between Jews in other countries and the State of Israel.

The tie of Jews to the State of Israel isn't uniform and equal. It is possible to enumerate four stages or kinds: A) the personal attachment of a Jew who immigrates to Israel, intends to immigrate or prepares his children to immigrate; B) the active support - of a Jew that doesn't intend to leave the country in which he lives and to which he is connected by full and conscious citizenship but thinks that it is his duty to help the State of Israel either by contributions, economic investment, moral and political support or by placing his scientific or professional ability at its disposal; C) the passive sympathy of a Jew that is completely involved in the economic, political, public and cultural life of the country in which he lives and its nation and doesn't promote the welfare of Israel in any way but is interested in her development, follows her fate with friendly concern and sympathy; D) the active opposition of a Jew who wants to disassociate himself from the Jews in general or the tie of all Jews to the State of Israel and therefore demonstrates his negative and sometimes hostile, relation to the State of Israel.

But the Jews' connection to the State of Israel isn't static but subject to fluctuations and changes: a sympathizer can become a supporter and a supporter can become an immigrant and the opposer can also become a sympathizer, supporter or immigrant due to the influence of a personal or collective experience; of course, all these changes can also occur in the opposite direction.

The approach of communist theory to the problem of the Jewish people expressed itself in the unequivocable doctrine that the solution of the problem is the liberation of the Jew from his Jewishness, that is to say, social progress will also bring equality and liberation for the Jewish citizen (emancipation) and as a result he will assimilate in the nation in which he lives.

CRITICIZES CJN CORRESPONDENT

Dear Editor:

On behalf of our organization, I should like to thank you for the complimentary subscription to The Canadian Jewish News, an excellent newspaper.

One point I should like to bring to your attention is an article in the issue of January 3rd under the heading: B'nei Akiva Clashes With Aguda. Besides being a sensational heading, the headline had absolutely nothing to do with the article although it implied that the two orthodox organizations had a battle. I am sure the fault probably lies with the correspondent.

The article was used in one of our discussion groups due to the fact that it included a number of pressing religious problems in Eretz Israel.

Sermon for the week

FRIENDSHIP

What is friendship? Almost everyone thinks he knows. After all, everyone likes to pretend he is an expert when it comes to people. We will leave science to the scientists and art to the artists, but when it comes to people, few of us are willing to take back seats to anyone. Thus we constantly hear definitions of true friendship that are patently false, and friendships based on them usually collapse under pressure. For example, some people feel they have found a true friend when they have found someone whom they rarely feel like criticizing. Either they feel the friend is perfect and beyond criticism, or they have a different moral standard for their friend than they have for all other people. They will pardon in their friend the same wrongdoing for which they would criticize another. Sooner or later this type of friendship disintegrates. For eventually our friend does something so bad that we cannot pardon even him for it; or else we realize that it is foolish to treat him differently than other people. Then if we open our mouths to criticize that friend, he cannot accept the reproof. He even takes offence at the very idea that he is being criticized by a close friend. Then the whole friendship grows cool.

No friendship is stronger than the foundations on which it is based. Age is not the test of the strength of a friendship. Even a truly empty relationship can last years when it is never put to trial. The true test of a friendship is the ability of the friends to learn from each other and to accept advice and criticism from each other. In such a friendship the parties can learn from their mistakes, and the bonds of their union are not only the pleasures they experienced together, but the occasions of shame and embarrassment they endured when they reprimanded each other for errors. Genuine friendship should lead to the mutual moral improvement of the parties involved.

In his commentary to the Ethics of the Fathers, Maimonides gives a definition of the ideal friendship:

"It is necessary for a man to acquire a friend for himself in order that his deeds and all his interests will be improved. If at first he cannot find such a friend, he should persevere with all his heart. And when you befriend, do not befriend on your own standards. Rather, befriend on the standards of your friend. Each friend should try to promote the will of his friend, (rather than always attempt to force his own will on his friend). A virtuous friendship is one wherein both parties relate the purpose of the friendship to the achievement of good. Each will assist his friend in attaining what is good for both jointly."

DRAMA EFFECTIVE

Max Frisch' heavy drama, Andorra, is being presented at Ryerson Theater by the Ryerson Drama Workshop. Antisemitism is the absorbing theme. Frisch handles the issue bringing to the finale a shattering effect. Producer is Harvey Rogers.

MIRELE EFROS

Ida Kaminska is the magic name and Mirele Efros is the magic play. Either way, Toronto's Jewish community, and non-Jewish as well, eagerly await the days of April 4, 5, 6 when the Grand Dame of the Yiddish stage performs in the title role at the Royal Alexandra Theater.

To quote Richard Shepard of the New York Times: "Great acting . . . The performance by the Jewish State Theater of Poland was altogether satisfying. The others in the cast are skillful, able, talented people . . . the staging of the play was remarkably effective. It recreates the feeling of Jewish life in Poland before the turn of the century."

NEW BILL

The Mills Brothers appear at the Hook and Ladder Club of the Seaway Beverly Hills Motor Hotel for two weeks beginning this coming Monday, March 10th.

ISRAELI MUSICAL

For one day only, Saturday, March 22nd, Joe Amar, dynamic Israeli singer who has conquered audiences wherever he has performed, will appear at Eaton Auditorium heading an all-star cast featuring Sara Aviani.

UNSOLICITED ADVICE FROM MERCURI

Lydda, Israel.-It seems as though Israel right now has no other worries on her head but to take sides in Greece' civil strife.

Said glamorous Greek star Melina Mercuri when she stepped off an El Al plane here: "I have not come on a private visit. I have come here to get Israel to help Greece. You are my last hope."

Miss Mercuri was met at the airport by her husband Jules Dassin who is here shooting the film, The Slave.

Tall, green-eyed and blonde, with the well remembered features which graced Never on Sunday, and, Phaedra, Miss Mercuri said she was overwhelmed at being here. "Not only am I married to a Jew, and I know that it is not easy for him with a shikseh such as I, but I know that the people who live here know the taste of fascism, know what torture is—and all my friends in Greece are tortured—and the people in Israel can identify with our fight for freedom."

THE MEGILLA: Manger At His Best

Whoever saw The Megilla of Itzik Manger last week at Eaton Auditorium couldn't have gone home disappointed. For, regardless of the cast--and they were good--this was Manger in top form.

How a favorite story of the Bible could have been twisted in a manner to make one feel it a part of the present and that it must be just that way can but be devised in the mind of someone with an infinite supply of humor.

There is Esther who listens to Uncle Mordechai because she knows in just such a way will mean, antisemitic Haman be annihilated. Leading up to this point are events depicting human frailities that could come out of a comedy of tomorrow.

English commentary was added, most likely, for zest as well as explanation. However, the Yiddish was so perfect -- such a Yiddish is rare -- any footnote of sorts was superfluous.

We loved the play of words, the sounds of poetry, the Song of the Golden Peacock, a Mangerism of sheer delight.

Lillian Lux and Pesach Burstein really tried. But somehow one couldn't dispel the thought of Second Avenue Theater and its familiarity.

Evelyn Kingsley gave a tantalizing Esther. She has all the talent of a Helen Beverley in the old Moishe Oysher pictures before she married Lee Cobb. It is hoped Miss Kingsley doesn't fall into anonymity. She has great potential.

As for Mike Burstein -- aided by his vitality and zest, he could develop a style of his own.

With all its weaknesses, we enjoyed this Megilla of Itzik Manger.

THEATRE MUSIC FILM

by D. COHN

* When Barbra Streisand was in Paris for the premiere of Funny Girl, she attended afterwards the charity ball at the home of Baron and Baroness de Rothschild. She was introduced to the elegant guests by Lee Solters, her press agent, as The Baroness de Flatbush. No one asked questions.

* The Hebrew Writers Association has thrown open its doors to Israelis writing in all languages. At first the veteran Hebrew writers objected on principle, for the renaissance of Hebrew literature was an integral part of the quest for national liberation in the land of the forefathers where Hebrew was the literary medium of the liberated Jews. However one appreciates the literary greatness of Jews writing in other languages, the conscious revival of a national language singles out the Hebrew writer of the Galut generation; he feels he has a trust which he is duty bound to defend against any encroachment.

Previous efforts to introduce Yiddish authors into the Hebrew Writers Association failed. Those who write Yiddish have a separate organization which does not share the Tchernihovsky House in Rehov Kaplan, Tel Aviv.

* A Teaspoon Every Four Hours, starring Jackie Mason, one of the authors and a major investor in the comedy, opens in New York at the end of the month. Others in the cast are Bernard Weber who will produce the play and Mike Mortman. Jeremy Stevens directs; Michelle Rosenberg also is featured.

Mason provided $48,000 of the $125,000 production cost. He says he was the original author but called in Messrs. Weber and Mortman as collaborators. The plot deals with a father of two children and the readjustment of his life after his wife dies.

* Alan King is preparing for his debut as a movie producer. He has acquired the screen rights to An Eskimo Named Joe Siegelman, a play by Abe Einhorn.

King, who produced and starred in The Impossible Years on stage, admits he is "disillusioned with Broadway. When Abe Einhorn, who happens to be a working Broadway stagehand, came to me with Eskimo as a possible stage vehicle, I immediately saw it as a film. It's a pathos-filled comedy about a very moral middle-class New Yorker who has disturbing sexual fantasies about his very moral wife." So, what does he do? He puts on an Eskimo suit, of course. "Then everyone -- his wife, his daughter, his psychiatrist and a male nurse -- tries to help him solve his problem. Ernest Pintoff will work on the script and perhaps direct, and I may wind up playing the male nurse."

Einhorn, 43 and happily married and doesn't have an Eskimo suit to his name, has been writing diligently for more than seventeen years. He sold his first play, Thursday Is a Good Night, in 1964 but it didn't quite make it to Broadway. Two years ago, another Einhorn effort, Agatha Sue, I Love You, did make it, but not for long. "I wrote 'Eskimo' with Broadway in mind," Einhorn says, "But I couldn't be happier if it makes it as a film." Even if it doesn't make it as a film, there's surely room on TV for a man in a sexy Eskimo suit.

* Jack Klugman says that if somebody offered him the chance to play the romantic lead in a motion picture, he would probably turn it down in favor of a "juicy character role", like the one he performs in, Goodbye, Columbus. Klugman, who is recognized as one of the leading character actors in motion pictures and television, has been seen in more than 400 different portrayals on the home screen. In 1964 he won the Emmy for his guest star performance in The Defenders. In films, he has won critical acclaim in, Twelve Angry Men, Days of Wine and Roses, and as a police officer in, The Detective.

* Esther and Abi Ofarim, Israeli duo, record in eight languages but they do their best in German. So great is their popularity at the moment in Germany that their company releases their new songs in initial pressings of 199,000.

The Ofarims are great artists but the husband and wife team derive much of their magnetism from their high-decibel promotion as Israelis. So much so that every major German record company is frantically seeking an Israeli artist to promote.

KEEP SMILING

WELL AND KICKING

Said the guy in a cemetery, admiring a magnificent mausoleum: "That's what I call living."

SOMETHING NEW?

The little old lady went to the great Yiddish scholar. "Doctor," she said, my rheumatism is killing me."

"I'm sorry, Madame, I'm only a doctor of philosophy. I can't help you."

"So tell me, doctor, what kind of sickness is philosophy?"

WRONG NUMBER

An immigrant Jewish housewife answered her phone. At the other end emerged a British voice. "This Mrs. Astor's secret'ry. She wishes to confirm her luncheon engagement with Mrs. Vanderbilt at the Colony today."

"Oy, lady," exclaimed the housewife, "have you got a wrong number."

SURPRISE

Most people experience a strange emotion when telling the truth. They find they don't need a good memory.

THAT'S HOW

Mother rabbit to her small bunny: "A magician pulled you out of a hat. Now stop asking questions."

ALWAYS WORK

Said the new husband, shopping for a new kitchen: "But darling, it isn't automatic. See, here's the switch you have to turn on."

CONSERVATIVE RABBIS JOIN W.J.C.

New York (JCNS) - The Rabbinical Assembly, the international association of Conservative rabbis, has joined the World Jewish Congress - the first rabbinical group to do so. The president, Rabbi Ralph Simon, said the action was taken by the Assembly's executive committee without any dissenting vote.

The Rabbinical Council of America, the Orthodox organization, will probably not join. This was indicated at the Council's recent mid-winter conference.

Burning Rectal Itch Relieved In Minutes
Exclusive Healing Substance Relieves Pain As It Shrinks Hemorrhoids.
If you want satisfactory relief from 'Itching Piles'—here's good news. A renowned research laboratory has found a unique healing substance that promptly relieves the burning itch and pain—actually shrinks hemorrhoids. This substance has been shown to produce a most effective rate of healing. Its germ-killing properties also help prevent infection.
In case after case "very striking improvement" was noted, even among cases of long standing. And this improvement was maintained over a period of months!
This was accomplished by a new healing substance (Bio-Dyne)—which quickly helps heal injured cells and stimulate growth of new tissue. Now Bio-Dyne is offered in ointment and suppository form called Preparation "H". Ask for it at all drug stores—satisfaction or money refunded.

HUMAN RELATIONS

Clothed in Fears

DR. ROSE N. FRANZBLAU

QUESTION: My son, 3, is a very bright and happy fellow. However, he is attracted to little girls, and likes to play with girls' toys. He also enjoys putting on my shoes and clothes, and has tried to put on my make-up.

I have tried to interest him in playing with two little boys, next door neighbors. When he does, he wants them to play the father, and he the son.

My husband and I are separated for the second time since he was born. I work. I tell his father that he must spend more time with the child. He is with him only on Saturday and only if I come along.

I felt nursery school might possibly help. But there he has also made friends only with the girls. I try not to harp on these things, but to explain boy and girl differences to him.

Money is scarce. My husband is a civil servant—but he gambles. This is the only thing we fight about. Otherwise we get along very well. We are talking about reconciling. In my household I have two teenage brothers and a father.

ANSWER: By the "pretend" games children play and the costumes they dress up in, they oftimes tell about their problems which they cannot express in words.

In the younger years, for a little boy to want to dress up in his mother's clothes may only be his way of saying that he does not have enough of his mother. To put on her clothes is his way of getting close to her.

Even though the grandfather and two uncles may be very loving to your son they cannot make up for the insecurities caused by the repeated separations from his father. In answer, he dresses up like a girl and wants the special care and attention that the so-called weaker sex gets.

The basic "sex" question which your son wants answered is why his mommy and daddy aren't together.

IN LEAVING YOUR HUSBAND AFTER EACH GAMBLING "binge," you are only doing to him, psychologically, what all gamblers feel "Lady Luck" does to them when they lose. By your reconciliations you play into his fantasy and act like "Lady Luck" who will return and make him win. The punishment of being put out blots out his feeling of guilt and invites him to gamble again.

Part of any reconciliation agreement between you should include the provision that your husband join Gamblers Anonymous. Gamblers Anonymous does a fine job of rehabilitation. They work not only with the gamblers, but with their wives. The insights they gain from working with a group of persons who have the same problem help them to control this drive and not let it overwhelm them.

Once your family is reunited and his father's loving presence is with him all the time, your little son will identify with him and want to play a male role both in his fantasies and with his peers.

Recipe

lemon-lime supreme

1 1/2 cups crushed ice
1/2 cup hot water
1 envelope unflavored kosher gelatin
4 envelopes artificial sugar substitute
Lemon or lime juice to taste (about 5 tblsps.)

In blender, on high speed, put gelatin and hot water. Blend for 30 seconds. Add lemon or lime juice and sugar substitute. Cover. When blender blades reach full speed, add crushed ice. Blend 60 seconds. Gelatin in 90 seconds is ready to serve.

TEA AND SHOW

A tea and fashion show sponsored by Sisterhood of Shaarei Tefillah will be held next Wednesday. Convenors are Bess Millstone and Beatrice Moskowitz.

No Good Either Way
by Ruthie

There was a time that when you visited the city of your origin you'd stay at the home of a close relative. Why go to a hotel? Spend money unnecessarily? You'd buy the hostess a gift at a quarter the price out for a weekend and shoin (finished). You acted like a lady and you had no guilty conscience.

Mayla (suppose) they were inconvenienced is another story. You decided they ought to be happy you think of them.

And you were served a breakfast Sunday morning that would cost a fortune in a restaurant: fresh, hot bagels the host had to run out for at the corner bakery, egged on by his wife's dirty looks if he rebelled the slightest; cereal; a nice, old fashioned feinkokhen (omelet), herring and smoked white fish; pancakes with gobs of syrup; cups and cups of coffee, kukhen. Honest, you got all that. Because didn't you serve them everything but the kitchen sink the last time they were over when they were on a sightseeing trip? So they had to pay back.

Naturally you reciprocated. You asked for a dishtowel. But when your hostess politely protested -- after all, you're company -- you ignored her half-hearted, "Don't bother, really," and sat like a ponya (lady).

Lunchtime was a repetition. In fact, you couldn't wait to dig into that delicious smelling roast.

Supper was something else. You were giving your hosts a break. They'd drive you to another relative's who, you thought, would be insulted if you didn't go over there.

If the thought ever entered your mind that maybe they had something else to do, you pushed it aside. What could be more important than taking you around? And that gave them also the chance to see some of the family they'd never visit otherwise.

As for you -- you wouldn't dream of "shaming" them by going to a hotel.

But I'll tell you something, such "shame" I could stand.

* * * *

There's only one fly in the ointment -- your neighbors. They barrage you with questions like, "See any shows? You went shopping? Did you eat at that fabulous, new place?"

So go explain you had no time. And tahka (really) you didn't. Because it took a whole month to see the whole family. God forbid if you visited one auntie and ignored another.

The only way you could do that was going to the city incognito. But you couldn't do it.

* * * *

Times have changed, though. Today you make it a big production to check in at a hotel. And not because you're considerate of others but because it's more convenient for you. After all, when you're on a holiday, why shouldn't you rest your bones properly? At somebody's house you either double up or maybe sleep in the rec room where the dampness gives you the kinks.

In a hotel you're in a comfortable bed, you don't have to get up with the chickens to use the bathroom so you don't hog the place, you can order anything you want, you don't have to bother making the bed (you do that at home), you can put away your company manners for awhile, you can see the latest play and sleep to your heart's content. That's a vacation.

And, the biggest advantage is, this is a hint in case anybody comes visiting your way.

* * * *

Nu, so what do you think could happen just for spite? It'll never happen any other time. Just as you're gaily strolling down the street, you bump into a relative. So it doesn't take long till the family gets wind you're in town.

Either way you can't win.

MONTREAL RABBINICAL COLLEGE LAUNCHES DRIVE

The amount of $308,000 is the minimum objective of the forthcoming 27th annual maintenance fund campaign for the Rabbinical College of Canada, Tomche Tmimim Lubavitch, announced Jack Tietolman, president of the College.

This year's campaign chairman will be the well known prominent Jewish community leaders and philanthropists: Louis Bass; Moses Richler; Max Wolofsky.

The campaign officially will be launched at the Governor's Dinner, Tuesday, March 11, at 6:30 p.m. in the auditorium of the College.

The Rabbinical College of Canada was founded in Montreal in 1941 by a group of nine young students from Russia. Since then the Rabbinical College has become one of the leading schools on the North American continent. Students from all over the world are enroled here. The college maintains a dormitory and kitchen for out of town students.

Rabbi L. Kramer, director of the Yeshiva, will convey a message from the world famous leader of the Chabad movement, the Lubavitcher Rebbe, M. Schneerson.

On the occasion of the 27 years (the numerical value of the Hebrew word Zoch which means pure), the Campaign chairmen issued a statement which reads partly: "We live in a time when student unrest has reached explosive proportions. Never has the need of Yeshiva training been more urgent, with its unswerving aim of keeping minds clear and purposeful and of upholding faith in the Almighty. The 27 years of educational achievements of our Yeshiva have shown to the entire community how pure is the soul and the mind of our youth. By pursuing the direction contained in the Torah, this purity can be extended to the entire community, and the so-called "generation gap" narrowed to a minimum. We are proud of the achievements of this Yeshiva."

In the 27 years of the existence of the College close to 100 students have graduated as rabbis, shochtim, teachers. But hundreds more from every walk of life are taking leading positions in the front lines of communal life everywhere.

The secret ingredient in Schapiro's Kosher Wine is Tradition!

It takes more than the finest grapes to make the world's finest Kosher wine. It takes generations of experience. At our underground winery, we make wine slowly, carefully, the way wine was made over 5000 years ago.

The result is a wine of uniquely superior taste as well as one that is truly traditional.

If you don't shop early, you may have to settle for something less. A lot less.
